Re: Electronic public comments to SEC
regarding climate rule, file # S7-10-22

As a milk verification cooperative that represents dairy farmers across the state of Wisconsin, I am writing on behalf of our farmer members to submit comments to the Securities and Exchange Commission's proposed rule on the Enhancement and Standardization of Climate-Related Disclosures for Investors.

Although this proposed rule is likely well intended as a step to both measure and monitor climate related information on publicly traded companies on Wall Street, this extension of reporting on Scope 3 emissions will inevitably filter down the supply chain to our nation's family farms who grow and raise the food we eat. This will create a new level of reporting obligations, technical challenges and significant financial and operational difficulties that will cripple our farm families. Unlike the large corporations that are currently regulated by the SEC, our family farms don't have the teams of compliance officers and on-staff attorneys to take on the tasks that would be required to comply with your proposed rule intended for Wall Street.

Our farmers are regulated by agencies at the federal, state and local levels. Sustainably and responsibly grown and raised food is the basis of the success of the American farmer - both protecting and improving the environment is a daily part of doing business. Please don't place debilitating regulations on the backs of our farmers, as they are the solution to climate concerns and are leading the way...without current regulations from the SEC.

Feel free to contact me for any additional information or if you'd like to speak directly to any of our farmer members for more details or to schedule a farm tour.

Sincerely,

Kim Bremmer
